ICCA 2020 International Conference on Computing Advancements ACM: Open Access Form

There are several ways you may now assign publishing rights to ACM. You may ask ACM to manage your rights for you (including pursuit of plagiarism and clearance of third-party re-use permissions) by transferring the requested rights to ACM using either the traditional ACM Copyright Transfer Agreement or the ACM Publishing License.

The community has also asked ACM to offer up-front OA fees should authors wish to make their works permanently open access (OA) in the ACM Digital Library.

ACM is therefore now offering authors these OA fees: $900 if you are not a member of ACM or $700 if you or any of your co-authors are ACM members.

You may find additional information about the rights options and the OA fees at <http://authors.acm.org>. The FAQ tab is particularly helpful.

You may complete this form by choosing how you wish to manage the rights to your article. If you choose the OA option, ACM will invoice you separately. Upon receipt of the invoice email, if you are not already a member of ACM or an ACM SIG, you can take advantage of the ACM and SIG member discount rate by becoming an ACM and/or SIG member or you may do so now <http://campus.acm.org/public/qj/quickjoin/interim.cfm?promo=PROSOA>. You may ask ACM to manage your publishing rights for you by transferring the requested rights to ACM using either the traditional ACM Copyright Transfer Agreement or the ACM Publishing License. But with the OA payment choice, you may also choose to manage all rights yourself, by choosing the ACM Permission Form, from which you may also choose to display a Creative Commons License on your work.

If you do not want to pay the OA fee, you will need to transfer publishing rights to ACM either by using the traditional ACM Copyright Transfer Agreement or choosing the ACM Publishing License.

If the paper information above does not reflect your paper's information, please contact the editorial staff at rightsreview@acm.org.
